Dear Mr. Weisberg:

I'm afraid that my remarks are going to strike you as irrelevant and inconsequential.

I don't see how anyone can evaluate a manuscript such as yours without reproducing the work you have done, and obviously that is not possible or probably even within most editors' competence. I am not sure what the proper avenue for a work such as this is. I do not, however, think that the ordinary trade publisher could in good faith undertake it without some sort of jurisprudential backing.

Sincerely,

Timothy Seldes
Senior Editor
